

Make big decisions on better information.

Plan investments, expansion and budgets around what your flight training operation can realistically deliver, with capacity, demand and financials connected from the start.

THE CHALLENGE

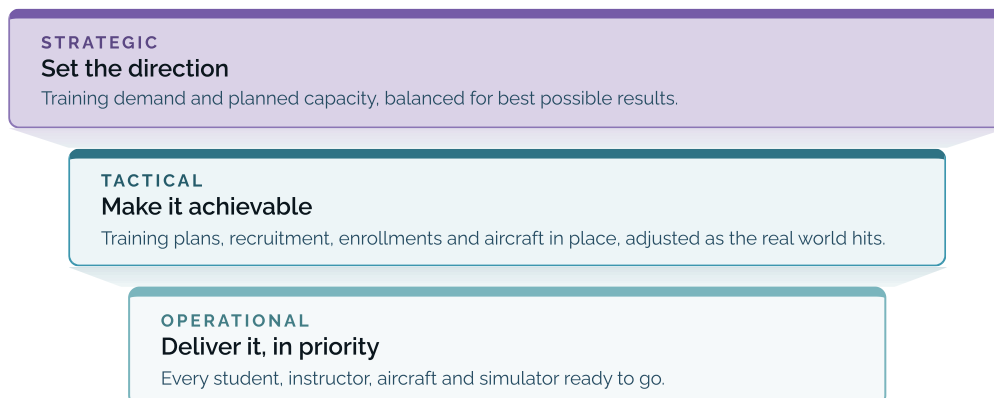

The details behind the numbers matter.

A flight school can look straightforward at a high level. Aircraft fly hours, students complete courses and revenue follows. But building an accurate picture of what the operation can actually achieve is much harder. You need to understand the resources available, what they can realistically deliver each month, and how those resources will change over time. Then there's the demand: training already committed to, future starts, different programs and the resources each will require. Every part of the picture matters, and every part affects the others. Without a detailed understanding of how a flight training operation works, it's incredibly difficult to know whether the numbers really stack up. AeroPlanned brings that operational understanding into one clear, connected model.

WHAT YOU GET

- Test different plans
Change programs, intake sizes and start dates and see the impact across the operation.
- Keep the plan achievable
See where future demand exceeds what the operation can realistically deliver.
- Build revenue your way
Model revenue by course, customer type, payment schedule or training hour to reflect how the business actually earns.
- Balance resource demand
Adjust the training mix and timing to make better use of available capacity.
- Model real operating costs
Build costs around the resources you actually expect to use, and adjust assumptions as costs change over time.
- See every change flow through
Change demand, capacity, resources or financial assumptions and see the impact across the wider plan.

HOW AEROPLANNED WORKS — THE THREE LEVELS OF PLANNING

"AeroPlanned is the first product to accurately predict future training activity using real operational constraints."
